“ An oil rig far in the cold North Sea, A shipping port on the Chesapeake, A power dam on a Utah lake, An L.A. harbor water intake, A barge in the Gulf of Mexico, It's never certain where he might go. No matter where the job or what the plan, You can depend on a deep sea diving man. Welding steel and blasting rock, Inspecting hulls, building docks, Jetting sand, laying pipelines long, It's been some time since he's been home. Working with his heart and hands, He's known as a deep sea diving man. Footprints where surf's spray is cast, Footprints left as he walked past, A man alone with his thoughts, Of what he's gained and what he's lost. Surely God will find it in His heart, To touch the depths, the cold, the dark, And bless this life that few understand, The life of a deep sea diving man
