

Suzanne K Collins

February 4, 2013

On February 4th 2013, a very bright light was absent from the spot that it had shone on so brilliantly for an all too brief fifty three years. The absence of that remarkable light marked the passing of a very special and irreplaceable lady. She was known to those who cherished the life that she had invited them to share as a loving and supportive wife, an adoring and caring mother. As a little sister, and as a dependable and loyal friend. She would seldom, if ever, ask that the love she gave to others be given back to her in any form or fashion. Her love for those around her was given freely and unconditionally, for her heart was filled with the love of our Lord. Her hope was for all that knew her that they would not find sadness, anger or confusion by her death, but rather would rejoice in the realization that she had found her way home, to be forever with her Lord. To be forever joyful and shine even brighter in the Kingdom of Heaven. Please come together and find enjoyment in the celebration of the life of Suzanne Collins, for know that she is now shining as bright as she knew she always could. Whenever you pass a field of blue bonnets dancing in the springtime breeze, look closely, and remember my darling Suzanne.

The Addison family and staff extend our heartfelt condolences to the Collins family in their time of loss.
